Chapter 1

She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away. Outside, t he rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awa ke except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea.

Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the hou se was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward t he sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet.

Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carrie d leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away.

He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the ro om was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run aw ay. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof.

The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the wor ds might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof . Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock.

The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, a s if the words might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He w rote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again.

Chapter 2

Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the hou se was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward t he sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet.

Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carrie d leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away.

He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the ro om was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run aw ay. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof.

The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the wor ds might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof . Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock.

The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, a s if the words might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He w rote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again.

She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away. Outside, t he rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awa ke except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea.

Chapter 3

Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away.

He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof.

The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock.

The lamp was low and the room was quiet. She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again.

She turned the page slowly, as if the words might run away. Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea.

Outside, the rain kept a patient rhythm on the roof. Nobody in the house was awake except the old clock. He wrote one line, crossed it out, and wrote it again. The river below the bridge carried leaves toward the sea. The lamp was low and the room was quiet.